SATURDAY SPEAKER SERIES: STOMP AND SHOUT: THE UNTOLD STORY OF NORTHWEST ROCK & ROLL

On September 13th, the Society kicks off our 2025 Fall Saturday Speaker Series with Humanities Washington speaker Peter Blecha, author of Stomp and Shout: R&B and the Origins of Northwest Rock and Roll. See page 5 for details.

Northwest Rock & Roll's legacy includes grunge icons like Nirvana and Pearl Jam, metal pioneers such as Queensrÿche and Heart, and earlier garage rock legends like The Kingsmen and The Sonics, who popularized "Louie, Louie." But that's only part of the story. In this talk, the author explores the overlooked bands and scenes that shaped the region's music—linking Ray Charles, Quincy Jones, and Jimi Hendrix to the R&B-infused roots of the "Original Northwest Sound." Blecha is director of the Northwest Music Archives, founding curator at MoPop, and longtime staff historian at HistoryLink.org.

For an interview with the author, see our blog post.

YOUNG HISTORIANS EXPLORE REDMOND'S PAST

By Laura Lee Bennett

In June, RHS hosted a field trip for third-graders from Sunrise Elementary in the Northshore School District. Accompanied by teachers and parent chaperones, three classes of very curious nine-year-olds took a tour of the Society's office and museum, visited local historical sites on a scavenger hunt, and visited Adair House at Anderson Park, where volunteers were on hand to lead them in an "ekphrastic" poetry activity—writing answers to a series of questions about a historical photo, which in turn became a poem. They also learned how to make an old-fashioned toy called "ball in cup."

The scavenger hunt led students to local landmarks and buildings, with a history of their origins and what businesses occupy these buildings today: Bill Brown's Saloon/The Matador, Redmond State Bank/Molly Moon's, Hotel Redmond, and the United Methodist Church.

"The kids were excited," noted Stephanie Holmes, teacher and parent volunteer at Sunrise, who worked with RHS to organize the event. "They were able to judge what buildings were old and which ones were new. We looked at the architecture and the bricks."

Many thanks to Jo Ann Potter, Joe Townsend, Elly Parran, and Alex Roelofs, who acted as RHS hosts. Kudos to Halee Turner, Administrative and Collections Manager, who coordinated schedules and designed the program.

Boat Race

By Jadon Lee, Age 9

A loud, thundering roar, and the whispering of the wind

A warm, soft weather,
like a puffy cloud

Green, brown, pink,
things blossoming

A fast, sleek boat, and
A quiet background

The raging speed boats
finished the race, drawing cheering fans

A quiet, serene morning,
still as a pond

FREDERICK M. STRAY: 1936–2025

By Deanna Leingang

Fred Stray passed away on June 16, 2025, in Kirkland, Washington, following a long and courageous battle with vascular dementia. He was just ten days shy of his 89th birthday.

Born in Seattle and raised on a farm in Redmond, Fred graduated from Lake Washington High School in 1954 and served in the U.S. Army in Alaska, where he discovered a love for skiing. After returning home, he worked at Boeing briefly and then began a successful lifelong career in sales, eventually founding Eastside Ice Company and later Eastside Ice Machines. Fred didn't just sell machines—he built lasting relationships based on honesty, service, and support.

In 1963, he met the love of his life, Frances (Barker), on a ski trip at Mount Baker. They married the same year and made Kirkland their home, raising two children, Deanna and Eric.

In 1972, Fred and Fran began running Ski King, Inc., growing it into one of the largest contract ski schools at Stevens Pass. Fred mentored generations of instructors and created a ski family whose bonds endure to this day.

While running three businesses—selling ice machines, directing a ski school, and delivering party ice—Fred never missed the moments that mattered most. He showed up for every soccer game, school event, and milestone, making sure his family always knew they were his greatest priority.

Fred is survived by his wife, Fran; daughter, Deanna (Leingang); son, Eric; grandsons Marcus (Madeleine), Nilserik (Tiffany) and Devin; two great-grandsons; sister, Anne (Wil) Salmi; sister-in-law, Sunday Stray; and many beloved nieces and nephews. He was preceded in death by his brothers Thorvald, Arne, and Trygve.

Fred's unwavering integrity, tireless work ethic, and remarkable ability to help others believe in themselves touched countless lives. Whether he was mentoring a young ski instructor, guiding a customer through a business decision, or offering a listening ear, he had a quiet way of making people feel seen, capable, and supported. His legacy will live on in the hearts of all who knew him.

A celebration of life will be held at a later date.

Editor's Note: Fred and Fran have been active longtime members of the Society, and Fred was a Lifetime Member. If you attended one of our annual picnics at Perrigo Park, you may have enjoyed delicious treats from the Stray's ice cream machine.

REDMOND TRANSPORTATION – FROM FOOT PATHS TO LIGHT RAIL

By John Oftebro

Before the early settlers arrived, the First Peoples here traveled on foot, on horseback, and by canoe. Their foot paths, trails, and methods of travel laid the pathways for future development. In fact, Redmond's trails, streets, and light rail follow their routes in the present day.

Luke McRedmond brought his family up the Squak River. By 1884, the Squak steam scow was the first riverboat to make regular runs along the Sammamish River. In 1888, the Seattle, Lake Shore and Eastern Railway began rail service, and lumber and cattle could now be shipped to market. Redmond was booming!

While horse-drawn wagons and carriages provided ways to get from farm to town (see our carriage display at Juel Park), it took hours to get from Carnation to Redmond and the train depot. But soon automobiles arrived, and in 1911, they replaced horse-drawn stages. In 1901, the Mattson Road was paved, and became the Red Brick Road in 1913.

In 1920, the first gas station arrived in Redmond, and in 1921, Redmond's first three school buses were built by teachers and students. In 1929, The Eastlake Parkway dirt road was paved, which made the 12-mile trip to Issaquah much smoother. For safety reasons, Redmond's first stop sign went up in 1932.

The year 1940 ushered in more Eastside traffic, as the Mercer Island I-90 (US 10 then) was completed. Redmond's mayor of 30 years, Bill Brown, not only owned a stage company, he was also a roadbuilder. He coined the motto, "All Roads Lead to Redmond"! He completed the West Lake Sammamish Parkway and developed in 1927.

One of Redmond's first gas stations, c. 1920.

In 1950, the ferry that ran from Madison Street in Seattle to Kirkland made its last run, and paddle-wheel steamers also stopped transporting people and goods from Madison Street in Lake Washington to Redmond.

In 1963, the Evergreen Point Floating Bridge opened with SR 520 extending as far as 148th Ave NE, and in 1964, a cow path that led to Theno's Dairy became NE 124th Street, connecting north Kirkland to Redmond. In 1966, booming traffic led to Redmond's first traffic light, which appeared at the Leary and Redmond Way intersection!

If you lived in the Redmond area in 1970, you were likely amazed that an airport was proposed on the 880-acre Redmond Watershed Preserve off Novelty Hill Road. Fortunately, Redmond residents responded with outcry to defeat the proposal, saving the park for the miles of amazing trails used today by walkers, runners, cyclists, horseback riders, and the preserve's native inhabitants.

It was the end of an era when the Redmond Railroad Depot was demolished in 1972. Commercial train traffic continued for several years, bringing grain to T-D Feeds. However, by 2010, a project began to remove the rails and develop the Redmond Central Connector. Meanwhile, after years of controversy, the previous rail bed to Issaquah became a paved 11-mile trail, and in 2010, the abandoned rail right of way to Woodinville became another trail project that would eventually join the 42 miles of Eastrail in East King County and the 30-mile Centennial Trail—all the way to Skagit County.

For decades, the Sammamish River Trail has offered a route to downtown Seattle. About 25 years ago, I took it, then connected with the Burke-Gilman Trail by bicycle to work. I only did it once, and only one way, since the trail was 32 miles, and it took me three hours!

Meanwhile, SR 520 was completed to connect with Avondale Rd NE; one-way streets in Downtown Redmond came and went; bridge construction improved the route to Kirkland over Rose Hill; and roundabouts sprouted up as we all awaited the arrival of East Link light rail this year. With its grand opening on May 10, we are now connected with Bellevue, and soon to the rest of the expanding Seattle network.

Since Redmond was proclaimed the "Bicycle Capital of the Northwest" in 1976, more cycling opportunities developed for both leisure and commuting. The 47 Redmond parks and 59 miles of trails made hiking and walking available to our growing population. Metro bus connections from the Redmond hubs—and now East Link light rail service—combine to complement the vehicle network, creating both economic and time-saving options for our expanding community.

Redmond Celebrates Trail Connection Milestone

Mayor Angela Birney will lead a ribbon cutting at 10:00 AM, Friday, Sept. 12, on the Redmond Central Connector Trail near Overlake Christian Church on Willows Road. This event marks the completion of the final 1.6 miles of the Redmond Central Connector Trail, connecting the city to the region's 42-mile Eastrail network. More info: Redmond.gov

WILLOWMOOR FARM: A REVISED CHRONOLOGY, 1905–1908

By Tom Hitzroth

In November 2023, when I began the process of documenting material for revisions to the landmark document for the Clise residence and property, part of that process was studying and balancing any new information with the early documentation collected by Marymoor Museum starting in 1965, as well as other sources I had accumulated over time. After spending 2023 to the current day with a new assessment, I began to compare the documents I had acquired from the Marymoor Museum files with what I had collected.

Combing through the documentation, I found that the evidence developed at least 40 years ago was inconsistent with what in fact had happened regarding the early Willowmoor Farm development. From this new information of how the Clise property developed, a different chronology began to emerge. Over time, I realized that no one had put together an account of this chronology; I had possession of these materials—Charles Clise's (James Clise's son) diary, the March 1906 property map, the 1908 property map, museum documents, and the interviews I had conducted from 1997–1999—to evaluate what the facts might be.

The Hunting Lodge Period and the Willowmoor Farm Period have traditionally been considered to be two separate periods, one succeeding the other. Document review now shows that they occurred at the same time, within the 1905-to-1907-time frame. It now appears that from the time Clise built the hunting lodge, he had always intended to start building the farm as soon as it was practicable.

In 1904, James Clise purchased 200 acres from John Tosh for his visits for hunting and fishing, and by early 1905, he had increased the total acreage to 430. In the spring of 1905, he began construction of the first buildings, which were to become Willowmoor Farm. In December 1905, the construction of the main house and the barnyard area was well underway. The March 1906 map shows that the hunting lodge was there, and 27 buildings and associated structures had already been completed. By 1908, the Clise home (7,500 square feet) was in place, and the building count for the barnyard and surrounding grounds was 34; more would be added by 1915.

According to this new information, Clise not only had a farm that was advanced for its time, but his building program had started much earlier than had been previously believed. By adjusting the chronology to fit the facts, all of Clise's efforts to build a model farm in the 17 years he owned the property make more sense—and a better, clearer picture of farm development can be documented.

In the next issue of this newsletter, I will describe the farm and its development from 1908, when the farm had taken shape, to changes in the farm by 1915, to the end of James Clise's time in 1921.

THE OPPORTUNITY OF COMMUNITY: PALMER'S EAST

By Paige Norman

After growing up in the High Desert region of California, Thomas Wilhite moved to Washington in 1995 to help his cousin, who owned an Acapulco Fresh restaurant in Redmond. He washed dishes, worked at the counter, and managed the location while dreaming of becoming part of the Redmond community in a more permanent way.

In 2000, he was able to realize his dream and purchased Palmer's East. The familiar building with a black-awning sits in the middle of the block on Leary Way NE between Cleveland Street and Redmond Way. The building has housed two butcher markets, a grocery store, and several restaurants and taverns in its 100-year history.

Ask Thomas about the early photos of Redmond hanging on the walls, and he'll readily give you a tutorial on what he's learned. "The history of the building got me interested in the history of Redmond."

Thomas admits he would like to travel when he retires, but has no idea when that will be. He loves Redmond and is involved in the community, sponsoring two Little League teams and hosting fundraising events. Many of his staff and customers have been regulars since before he owned the business. "When I decide I'm done being a restaurant owner, I'd love to be able to offer someone the same opportunity I had to be a business owner and community member."

Palmer's East has been a Business Member of the Society for more than five years. It is open 10 am to 1 am daily, with nightly karaoke, weekly trivia, and special holiday events. Outdoor seating under red umbrellas on the patio festively decorated with bright flowerpots is available, and there's something for everyone (even dogs are welcome)!

WILLIAM H. WHITE – A LEGACY OF LAW AND JUSTICE

Chapter 3: From Seattle to Redmond

By Paige Norman with Tom Hitzroth

This is the third installment in a five-part series about Justice William H. White, and his life dating from the Civil War to his time in Redmond, to his time as Washington Supreme Court Judge in the early 1900s.

Anti-Chinese violence broke out across the country in 1885, beginning with the Rock Springs Massacre in Wyoming, moving west to California, and eventually, to Seattle. Coal miners went on strike, asking for higher wages and better conditions.

The mining companies retaliated by firing the miners and then hiring less expensive Chinese laborers to work their mines. Threats of violence and bloodshed intensified, and on February 7, 1886, mobs in Seattle, Portland, and San Francisco attempted to drive Chinese workers out of town by forcibly removing Chinese families and their belongings to the pier.

Local law enforcement did little to dissuade rioters, and violence continued. Judge White asked the Territorial Governor, Watson Carvosso Squire, to call out the militia. President Grover Cleveland declared martial law, which remained in effect until February 22, although troops remained in the city several months longer. Judge White fought for the rights and freedoms of the Chinese families.

AFFIDAVIT.

No. 6324

Land Office at Olympia, W. T.

April 4, 1884.

I, William H. White, of King Co. W. T., do solemnly swear that I am a single man, of the age of twenty-one years, and a citizen of the United States; that I served for ninety days in Co. B, 102, O. T. I Regiment United States Volunteers; that I was mustered into the United States military service the 30th day of July, 1862, and was honorably discharged therefrom on the 15th day of May, 1865; that I have since borne true allegiance to the Government; and that I have made my application No. 6324 to enter a tract of land under the provisions of the act of June 8, 1872, giving homesteads to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors, their widows and orphan children; that I have made said application in good faith; and that I take said homestead for the purpose of actual settlement and cultivation, and for my own exclusive use and benefit, and for the use and benefit of no other person or persons whomsoever; and that I have not heretofore acquired a title to a tract of land under this or the original homestead law, approved May 20, 1862, or the amendments thereto, or voluntarily relinquished, or abandoned, an entry heretofore made under said acts: So help me God.

The riots brought forth the need to organize a Bar Association for King County. A committee composed of Justice White and five other Seattle lawyers met to form the Washington Bar Association.

In April 1884, Judge White filed a Soldier's Declaratory Statement and paperwork for a Homestead claim on 153.91 acres on Avondale. Homestead claims required the applicant to reside on the property for a minimum of five years, build a dwelling, and clear and cultivate the land.

White mostly spent weekends at the Avondale property, and would have traveled while undertaking his duties as a US District Attorney for the Washington Territory, it appears that he made this his home as he established crops and raised livestock. By 1889, White, his sister Martha, and his nephew Walter Fulton were living full-time in the farmhouse.

In Chapter 4, the Judge takes a wife.
